

The Pregnancy.gov Act

Problem: Nearly 88% of women who had abortions in 2022 were unmarried.¹ Mothers with unexpected pregnancies may be in fear of whether they can get support during pregnancy and after the child is born. There are valuable, privately-run directories available like Standing With You², Her PLAN³, and the EnVision App⁴. But these are independent efforts with limited resources.

Solution: The Pregnancy.gov Act would support the creation of a web application — Pregnancy.gov — that provides comprehensive information about within-zip code public and private resources available to families with unexpected pregnancies. Making use of preexisting government resources and programs, Pregnancy.gov would be implemented with no net cost to the federal government, and would leverage the government’s resources, preexisting assistance programs and intergovernmental relationships, and credibility intrinsic to a “.gov” address.

The Pregnancy.gov Act would also provide a grant program for States to establish or support existing efforts to aggregate relevant resources for the Pregnancy.gov website. Organizations that perform, refer for, or counsel in favor of abortion are explicitly prohibited from receiving grant funding or have any resources included on the Pregnancy.gov website.

No mother should ever have to feel alone. All public (federal, state, and local) and private resources based on zip code should be available in an easy-to-navigate web application, and the Pregnancy.gov Act would achieve this by providing timely and accurate informational resources for expectant mothers in areas such as:

- Adoption information and services
- Alternatives to abortion
- Breastfeeding information and protections
- Childcare, family leave assistance
- Clothing, household, baby supplies
- Family planning education
- Financial assistance
- Food and nutrition assistance
- Foster care, short-term care
- Healthy child development
- Housing support
- Legal support
- Mentorship, work, education opportunities
- OB-GYN and other health care services
- Perinatal hospice, pregnancy loss, infant loss resources
- Pregnancy counseling
- Prenatal diagnostic services
- Prepartum and postpartum services
- Primary and dental care
- Information about the reversal of the abortion pill
- Fetal development resources
- Risks of abortion at all stages of gestations
- Services for domestic, sexual violence
- Substance abuse recovery, mental health services
- Support services for abortion survivors and their families
- Transportation support
- Tax preparation
